The international event was featuring a wide range of activities, events, and opportunities for people of all ages and was including three tracks to meet the interest of those wanting to explore Hungarian business, cultural, or educational aspects. The 3-day event was held at the Museum of Arts & Sciences, located at 352 S. Nova in Daytona Beach.

"It's exciting to bring this new event to life," was explaining Piros Pazaurek, the event producer and Honorary Consul of Hungary of Central Florida in Daytona Beach. "It's going to be the most influential Hungarian-American event in the country. We invite everyone to come to check it out and experience the Hungarian culture."

The event was focusing on giving the Hungarian community a way to showcase their culture and business interests while giving non-Hungarian members of the community a way to experience the culture. The cultural weekend was featuring plenty of Hungarian food and activities for people of ages. The scheduled lineup including:

"This will be three days of Hungarian culture, insight, inspiration, networking, and more," added Pazaurek. "Whether you come for the business aspect, the cultural experience, or entertainment, you will be glad. This summit is an event that you will not want to miss."

The event was featuring more than 75 speakers and over 70 distinguished guests. Speakers at the event include Jordan Jiloty, the managing director of government and community affairs at NASCAR, David Cornstein, the United States Ambassador to Hungary, Joanne Magley, the director of marketing and customer experience at the Daytona Beach International Airport, and D. Connie Garzon, the Volusia Business Incubator Powered by the UCFBIP manager, among others.
